

Extraordinary People

... personalized care

Shannon Sheldon shows up for work every day with the same goal. She wants to make someone's treatment day a good day.

Shannon says, "We have the unique experience of getting to spend long periods of time with the same patients and the pleasure of really getting to know them. Some days in the infusion room are like old home week, where many of the patients know each other. Other days, people meet new comrades fighting the same battle.

"The Infusion/Chemotherapy Center is an important asset to the community. I can't imagine what it would be like to make a trip to Denver or Grand Junction every week to receive a chemo treatment, and then have to turn around and drive home. The stress of having cancer treatment is enough to worry about."
