

Extraordinary People

... personalized care

Shaking hands, waving, drinking a cup of coffee or giving a high-five; these would all be difficult things to do with an arm or hand that doesn't work.

Sue Winters has been helping patients with hand and upper extremity problems in the Yampa Valley for 15 years. As a hand therapy specialist, she works with people to prevent and treat all types of hand issues such as ligament injuries, fractures, arthritis and tendonitis.

Sue says, "Your hands are so important for everything that you do. I love helping people get better. It is so rewarding to see patients recover and return to the activities they love. We have all kinds of tools to get people moving again. I try to make therapy as fun as possible."
